CONTINUED EDUCATION KEY IN DENTISTRY

One thing most dental patients don't realize, according to Dr. White, is just how outdated the information taught in dental schools is. "Some dental schools are the same as they were in the 1970s," he says. "Dentures or a three-unit bridge may be the largest case you'll do in dental school. In addition, the majority of dentists go directly from school into practice. Patients deserve to know this." He goes on to point out that continued education and training is vital in dentistry. As a senior instructor of NEUROMUSCULAR DENTISTRY at the Las Vegas Institute for Advanced Dental Studies, Dr. White tries to impress upon his postgraduate doctors and team-members the importance of a well-rounded approach. "Assessing diagnosis on the basis of the presence or absence of pain is antiquated," he says. Instead he utilizes and teaches with a COMPUTERIZED APPROACH using Myotronics equipment to assess where the patient's muscles are most comfortable, instead of just making the teeth appear straight and beautiful.
